Scientific names of agaricoid and boletoid fungi of Russia without accepted current names in Index Fungorum

This list includes 727 scientific names of agaricoid and boletoid fungi that do not ascribed unambiguously to accepted current names according querying with the API to Index Fungorum (IF) on 18.05.2021. The checklist is presented in alphabetical order for ease of searching.

For each name, the regions in which it is recorded are listed alphabetically. For each region, the publications in which the species has been published are listed in order from the earliest to the latest one. In cases where it has not been possible to assign the species to specific administrative regions due to lack of information in the publication, geographical regions have been retained as original distribution regions.

The reasons for their placement here are as follows:

- “No current name.” There is no accepted current name for such name in Species Fungorum.
- “Name with wrong authors’ citation.” The binomial combination exists, but its authors’ citations does not match any records in IF. It is impossible to interpret such records unambiguously and to bring them into correlation with specific taxa in IF.
- “Name absent from IF.” The combination is absent from IF.

Agaricus putidus* Weinm.

No current name.

Agaricus putidus Weinm. is given in tribus Lepiota, ser. Leucosporus (Weinmann, 1836). According to the protologue it represents a white-spored agaric, so it does not belong to Agaricus in modern sense (e.g. Kerrigan, 2016). There are no extant type specimens, the protologue is not clear enough to identify modern species. So, we interpret Agaricus putidus Weinm. as the name that has no current name.

Appendix D. Study history of agaricoid and boletoid fungi in Russia

The history of agaricoid and boletoid study in Russia was reviewed on the base of all the papers used for the checklist preparation. In addition, we used a number of overviews, listed below: “The study of pileate fungi in the USSR” by Boris P. Vassilkov (1953) covering the history of pileate fungi research up to 1950, and containing a nearly complete bibliography of earlier works; a detailed synopsis of mycological research in Russia, including Siberia, by XVIII century German and Russian scholars, presented by Heike Heklau and Heinrich Dörfelt (2007); a historical overview of mycological research in Russia compiled by Arthur A. Jaczewski (1933); bibliographies of mycological research for specific territories and protected areas (Nukhimovskaya and Kovalenko, 2001; Mukhin, 2008); and a number of sources on the history of botanical and mycological studies (Levitskaya, 1995d; Morozova, 1999; Potapov, 2015c; Shiryayeva, 2015b; Volobuev and Bolshakov, 2016; Filippova et al., 2017b; Kurochkin and Medvedev, 2017; Bogacheva, 2018).

Research history can be tentatively divided into four periods — the preliminary, or non-scientific period; the early period, starting from the establishment of the Russian Academy of Sciences in 1724; the classical period, beginning with works of Johann A. Weinmann; and the modern period, beginning with the studies of Lidia A. Lebedeva on agaricoid fungi.

The preliminary period is characterized by accumulation of knowledge on economically important fungi (mostly edible ones). No scientific papers of this period exist, however, some information can be found in various manuscripts, monastery revenue books and income-expense registries, the “Domostroy” (the classical set of household rules and instructions popular in Russian society), several books dealing with medicinal and culinary properties of fungi and book by British doctor Samuel Collins who was a personal physician to Alexis I of Russia in 1656–1666 (Vassilkov, 1953).

The early period began when the Academy of Sciences was established (1724), and inventory studies were organized. Numerous expeditions of mostly foreign scholars to remote areas of Russia aimed to reveal their natural richness, including plants in the broadest sense. These studies resulted in several botanical checklists, including some data on fungi. Information on pileate fungi can be found in reports on the results of academic expeditions (Vassilkov, 1953; Heklau and Dörfelt, 2007, 2017):

- expedition to Constantinople and Southern Russia by Johann Christian Buxbaum (1724–1726);
- Great Northern Expedition (1733–1743) through Siberia to Kamchatka by Georg Wilhelm Steller and Stepan P. Krasheninnikov;
- transcontinental Academic expeditions across Russia (1768–1774) by Peter Simon Pallas, Johann Gottlieb Georgi, and Johan Peter Falk, as well as the expedition to Caucasus by Johann Anton Güldenstädt.

S. P. Krasheninnikov also reported the first data on pileate fungi of the Northwestern part of European Russia, later published by David de Gorter in 1761 (Vassilkov, 1953).

By the beginning of the XIX century, such expeditions mostly ceased, and scholars focused on local studies: Christian Friedrich Stephan, Heinrich von Martius, Carl Ludwig Goldbach — on the Moscow Oblast; Grigory F. Sobolevsky — on the vicinities of St. Petersburg (Northwestern part of European Russia); Alexey F. Fortunatov — on the Vologda Oblast (Bucholtz, 1897a; Jaczewski, 1933; Vassilkov, 1953).

In many cases, data on fungi were quite scarce and could be hardly interpreted due various reasons (such as use of vernacular names, polynomial names instead of binomials, short or absent comments, etc.). Therefore, localities mentioned in the publications of this period are hardly interpretable in terms of modern administrative regions, they are often quite inaccurate. Several of the works mentioned above were included in the first all-Russian synopsis of fungi by J. A. Weinmann (1836, see below). Thus, these works are mainly of historical interest, and we did not include data from such publications into the checklist.

The classical period began with works of Johann A. Weinmann, the “founding father” of the Russian mycology, as he was the first botanist to contribute substantially to mycological studies in the Russian Empire. He was the first Russian scholar to follow Systema Mycologicum proposed by Fries (1821–1832), the most reputable mycological resource of the time. Therefore, we are able to interpret the fungal names given in his papers with sufficient confidence. His first mycological studies were focused on new fungal species described from St. Petersburg (Weinmann, 1824, 1832, 1835), and on compiling the checklist of fungi found near St. Petersburg (Weinmann, 1828, 1837).

His fruitful work resulted in the publication of “Hymeno- et Gastero-Mycetes hucusque in imperio Rossico observatos” (1836), summarizing all known data on macromycetes of the Russian Empire. About 80 taxa of agaricoid fungi listed in his works were described as new to science by the author himself. Hence, the works of Weinmann represent the de facto beginning of mycological research in Russia.

Joseph-Henri L veill , who took part in Anatoly N. Demidov’s expedition to Southern Russia in 1837, conducted botanical studies in Crimea, and noted a number of fungi, too. He described one new agaricoid species (L veill , 1842).

During the Siberian expedition of 1843–1844 led by Dr. Alexander Th. von Middendorff, Ilja G. Borszczow revealed a number of agaricoid fungi on the Taymyr peninsula (Krasnoyarsk Krai) and the coast of the Sea of Okhotsk (Khabarovsk Krai), including several new species (Borszczow and Borszczow, 1856). In 1857, he described some new species from the vicinity of St. Petersburg (Borszczow, 1857). Also, he compiled unpublished summary “Mycologia Petropolitana”, representing a list of about 200 species described and illustrated (Jaczewski, 1933; Vassilkov, 1953).

In the second half of the XIX century due to the emergence and rapid development of plant pathology, fleshy fungi remained “opportunistic” study objects. Only a few sources on the diversity and geography of agaricoid fungi can be found among the publications by foreign and local researchers during this period. During the U.S. North Pacific Exploring Expedition (1853–1856) botanist Charles Wright visited what is now the Chukotka Autonomous Okrug close to the Bering Strait and Kamchatka, and James Small collected some material in the north of what is now the Khabarovsk Krai. Their collections were revised by Miles J. Berkley and Moses A. Curtis (Berkeley and Curtis, 1860, 1978; Parmasto, 1983).

Petter A. Karsten took part in a Finnish expedition to the western part of Kola Peninsula in 1861 (Sennikov and Kozhin, 2018); five years later the results were prepared for publication (Karsten, 1866). Later, he included the material in two other papers (Karsten, 1876, 1889). Furthermore, he published a review titled “Rysslands, Finlands och den Skandinaviska half ns Hattsvampar” (Karsten, 1879, 1882). Unfortunately, there are no references to Russian published sources and no precise localities indicated for the species revealed during this survey. This paper is essentially a follow-up work, summarizing all data on fungi of the Russian Empire and mostly based on Weinmann (1836).

Some scattered data on agaricoid fungi were provided by prominent Russian and foreign mycologists, whose research was aimed mostly at ontogenesis, taxonomy and plant pathology: Paul Hennings (1895) and Johannes Abromeit (1895) — for the Kaliningrad Oblast; Arthur A. Jaczewski (1893, 1895, 1896, 1898) — the Smolensk Oblast; Fedor V. Bucholtz (1897c, 1897a, 1897b) and K. K. Heyden (1899) — Moscow and the Moscow Oblast; Nikolai V. Sorokin (1872) — Tatarstan. Nikolay M. Martianoff actively collected fungi in the vicinity of the Minusinsk (Krasnoyarsk Krai, Southern Siberia) and sent specimens to Felix von Th men, Karl Kalchbrenner, and Pier A. Saccardo. Thereafter, these species were published in works of the above-mentioned researchers in different Russian and foreign journals (Th men, 1877, 1878, 1880a, 1880b, 1882; Kalchbrenner, 1878; Saccardo, 1889, 1896).

During the first two decades of the XX century, extensive mycofloristic studies were performed by numerous experts. However, emphasis was made on plant pathogens, and agaricoid fungi continued to remain in the shadow of higher plants and pathogenic fungi. Here, we list papers which contain some data on agaricoid and boletoid fungi. Arthur Thesleff (1920) — the modern Leningrad Oblast, Pavel F. Elenev (1904) — the Smolensk Oblast; Vladimir A. Tranzschel (1901) — the Tver Oblast, Paul Hennings (1903, 1904, 1905), N. A. Mosolov (1906), J. P. Petrov (1910, 1911) — Moscow and the Moscow Oblast, Konstantin E. Murashkin (1911) — the Nizhny Novgorod Oblast; Ladislaus Hollos (1902, 1905) and Ferd Filarszky (1907) — Northern Caucasus; Petter A. Karsten (1904, 1905) and Nikolay A. Naumov (1915) — the Urals; Petter A. Karsten (1906, 1911) — Zabaykalsky Krai; Nikolay A. Naumov (1914) — Primorsky Krai.

Just like Martianoff a century earlier, Nikolay Y. Shestunov, an amateur naturalist, accumulated extensive collections of fungi in the broad sense (predominantly in the Caucasus and the Far East), but the data was not published. Several specimens of agaricoid fungi are stored in Mycological Herbarium of Botanical Institute (LE) and were used recently by Dr. Ekaterina F. Malysheva in her recent monograph on the family Bolbitiaceae (Malysheva, 2018). Apparently, the majority of specimens of pileate fungi collected by local researchers in the XVIII–XIX centuries were lost.

In 1908–1909, “Illustrated Keys to the Fungi of the Middle Russia” by Ekaterina P. Sheremeteva (edited by Fedor V. Bucholtz) was published. Essentially, it is an adapted translation of P. Hennings’ “Hymenomycetinae” in Engler’s “Die nat rlichen Pflanzenfamilien” (Hennings, 1900). It contains keys and descriptions of species supplemented with illustrations and notes on their distribution. In 1913, the second edition of Jaczewski’s “Keys to the Fungi” saw light. According to Vassilkov (1953), this book can be considered as a “full, but not critical review” of Russian fungi.

The modern period began in the 1920’s, when agaricoid fungi were established as an independent object of study: Lidia A. Lebedeva started a study of pileate fungi under the instruction of Alexandr A. Elenkin (Vassilkov, 1953).

Further we provide brief biographical notes on the first mycologists who focused on agaricoid and boletoid fungi in the USSR.

Lidia A. Lebedeva (1871–1950), a plant pathologist, studied under Vladimir L. Komarov. She started research on agaricoid fungi with mycophoenological observations in the Botanical Garden in Leningrad, in 1922–1926. Later, she visited Arkhangelsk Oblast (Lebedeva, 1933), Tver Oblast, Saratov Oblast (Lebedeva, 1927), Stavropol Krai (Lebedeva, 1930) and Altay; the collected material along with the existing data was used for a summary, which included general information on agaricoid fungi, a key, and a list of species, accompanied by descriptions and localities (Lebedeva, 1949). This work can be considered as the first country-scale checklist of pileate (mostly agaricoid and boletoid) fungi list. Nevertheless, the book was heavily criticized by Boris P. Vassilkov (Vassilkov, 1952b).

Rolf Singer (1906–1990), one of the most prominent XX century mycologists worked at the Komarov Botanical Institute in 1934–1941 (Mueller, 1995). He made several expeditions to the Caucasus, Altai Mountains, Karelia (Singer, 1929, 1931, 1943; Freindling, 1949), the material collected was used in his numerous works on taxonomy (Mueller, Wu, Ginns, and Redhead, 1997). The dissertation, which Singer defended while working in Leningrad (Singer, 1936b, 1942, 1943), became the basis for the monumental “The Agaricales in Modern Taxonomy” (Singer, 1951, 1962b, 1975, 1986).

Ljubov N. Vassileva (1901–1985) studied under Andrey Ya. Gordyagin at Kazan University. In 1937, she accompanied Rolf Singer in his Altay expedition; later, she spent several years studying pileate fungi in the Kavkazskiy Nature Reserve (Vassiljeva, 1939). Thereafter, she worked in the Volzhsko-Kamskiy Nature Reserve in Tatarstan (Vassiljeva, 1977). In 1944, Ljubov Nikolayevna moved to the Far East. In 1949 she founded the Laboratory of Lower Plants in the Far Eastern branch of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR, which became the first regional mycological center in the country (Bogacheva, 2018).

Boris P. Vassilkov (1906–1980) also studied under Andrey Ya. Gordyagin at Kazan University. Initially his interests considered economically important edible fungi of Mary El (diversity of edible species, their productivity and its prediction, search for appropriate localities to organize state points for trade with mushroom pickers, mapping of the most fruitful places etc.). Also, he has summarized study history of this group and performed extensive work to collect all possible published and manuscript sources dealing with pileate fungi (Vassilkov, 1953). Therefore, he made a review on pileate fungi distribution in USSR (Vassilkov, 1955a) without full list of fungi and precise localities. Boris Pavlovich has studied his own specimens from various regions of USSR (Mariyskaya ASSR, Khibiny, Caucasus, vicinities of the Baikal Lake, Chukotka and others) as well as ones sent from distant territories by other experts and amateurs.

The modern period can be tentatively divided into three phases. The first phase (1920’s through 1960’s) can be characterized by a relatively small number of mycologists interested in “agarics and boleti”; subsequently, papers focusing on pileate fungi were quite rare. During this phase, a very important study of the role of fungi in ecosystems was performed (summarized in Chastukhin and Nikolaevskaya, 1969). During the next thirty years (until the 1990’s), research focused mainly on the ecology of fungi (Burova, 1986). The numbers of mycologists increased, and several regional mycological centers appeared – in Perm (Lidia G. Perevedentseva), Penza (Alexander I. Ivanov), Novosibirsk (Nina V. Perova), Krasnoyarsk (Matilda I. Beglyanova, Natalja P. Kutafjeva), and Irkutsk (Alexander I. Petrov). Older mycological laboratories in Leningrad (Boris P. Vassilkov, Emma L. Nezdoyminogo, Alexander E. Kovalenko) and Vladivostok (Ljubov N. Vassileva, Margarita N. Nazarova, Eugenia M. Bulakh) successfully continued their work. Since the 1990’s, researchers from all over the country worked in various regions of Russia, and the diversity of agaricoid fungi became a popular subject for PhD theses (Kurochkin, 1993; Lazareva, 1998a; Stolyarskaya, 1998; Gorbunova, 1999; Fomina, 2000; Botashev, 2001; Morozova, 2001; Sopina, 2001b; Krapivina, 2004; Svetasheva, 2004; Kolmakov, 2005a; Palamarchuk, 2005; Kirillova, 2007; Kochunova, 2007; Malysheva, 2007; Sazanova, 2007; Volodina, 2007; Desyatova, 2008; Mukhutdinov, 2008; Ilyukhin, 2010a; Kirillov, 2011; Filippova, 2015; Shilkova, 2015; Zauzolkova, 2015; Botalov, 2017). Due to numerous papers and PhD theses overall knowledge of agaricoid fungi increased significantly.

To organize the massive amount of publications on fungi occurring in Russia, considering its vast territory, we decided to split them geographically: Eastern Europe (including Northern Caucasus and the Urals), Siberia (Western, Southern and Eastern parts) and the Far East. We accepted the eastern edge of the Urals – the isoline at 200 m. a.s.l. — as the geographical border between Europe and Asia, meaning that it does not match any administrative borders. We enumerated regions from north and west to south and east, and references in chronological order. It is necessary to point out that the following review is based mostly on mycofloristical papers, as they contribute significantly to the knowledge of agaricoid fungi diversity. A plethora of publications dealing with various aspects of ecology and taxonomy of agaricoid fungi are predominantly omitted here.

EASTERN EUROPE

Northern part of European Russia

Murmansk Oblast: scattered data on fungi of the arctic part of the region can be found in a number of papers (Vanin, 1928; Singer, 1950b; Vassilkov, 1956b, 1967); later, information was summarized in “Fungi of the Russian Arctic” (Karatygin, Nezdojminogo, Novozhilov, and Zhurbenko, 1999). In 1964 and 1965, Tatiana V. Pavlova with colleagues worked in the Kandalakshskiy Nature Reserve. They inventoried various groups of fungi, including agaricoid fungi (Pystina, Pavlova, and Shestakova, 1969). Later, in the 1970’s, Leonur V. Mikhailovsky studied the mycobiota of agaricoid fungi of the Khibiny mountains (Mikhailovskii, 1974, 1975b, 1975a). Data on several species collected in the Kandalakshskiy and Laplandskiy Nature Reserves were published too (Berlina, 2005; Kalamees and Raitviir, 2006).

Karelia: during the Olonetsk scientific expedition (1920–1922), Vsevolod P. Savich collected specimens of various fungi, including agaricoid fungi (Lebedeva, 1933). Later, in 1934–1936 and 1946–1947, Maria V. Freindling surveyed the Kivach Nature Reserve, and Rolf Singer also examined this material (Freindling, 1949). In 1975–1978, Nina P. Czerepanova with colleagues surveyed the fungi of the Sredniy island in the Kandalakshsky Gulf of the White Sea (Czerepanova, Perfiljeva, and Tobias, 1982). In 1995–1996, Alexander E. Kovalenko with colleagues studied the agaricoid fungi of the Valaam island (Kovalenko, Morozova, Fomina, and Särkisilta, 1998). In 2001, an annotated checklist of fungi of the Kivach Nature Reserve was published (Bondartseva et al., 2001). Long-term studies of ectomycorrhizal agaricoid fungi ecology were carried out beginning from 1959 by Vladimir I. Shubin with colleagues; eventually, the accumulated data were summarized in the monograph (Krutov et al., 2014). In 2011–2012, Olga O. Predtechenskaya and Anna V. Ruokolainen studied agaricoid fungi occurring in early succession stages of forest communities following clear-cutting (Predtechenskaya and Ruokolainen, 2013); some studies were carried out in the Vodlozerskiy National Park (Predtechenskaya and Ruokolainen, 2014) and Kostomukshskiy Nature Reserve (Predtechenskaya, 2015). In 2009–2018, Leonid A. Savelev and Anastasia V. Kikeeva studied the mycobiota of the city of Petrozavodsk (Savelev and Kikeeva, 2018, 2020).

Arkhangelsk Oblast: during the Olonetsk scientific expedition (1920–1922), Lidiya A. Lebedeva collected specimens of various fungi, including agaricoid fungi (Lebedeva, 1933). Data from the second half of the XX century mostly trace back to the arctic territories of the region and are scattered across numerous papers (Vassilkov, 1967; Nezdojminogo, 1982b, 1996, 2002), in 1999, the existing information was summarized in “Fungi of the Russian Arctic” (Karatygin, Nezdojminogo, Novozhilov, and Zhurbenko, 1999). A few checklists of agaricoid fungi were published recently (Ezhov, Ershov, Ruokolainen, and Zmitrovich, 2011; Ezhov, 2013; Ezhov, Gavrilo, and Zmitrovich, 2014). To our knowledge, there have been no systematic studies on the diversity of agaricoid fungi.

Nenets Autonomous Okrug: we found data on agaricoid fungi only in four sources: (Karatygin, Nezdojminogo, Novozhilov, and Zhurbenko, 1999; Kytövuori, 1999; Matveyeva, 2006, 2020).

St. Petersburg and Leningrad Oblast: a comprehensive summary of agaricoid fungi research published before 1999 can be found in Morozova (1999). Here, we briefly cover the key mycofloristic papers published in more recent years. In 1982, participants of a mycological conference in Kirishi collected a number of macromycetes during a foray; the list was published two years later (Kalamees and Kovalenko, 1984). In the 1990’s, Marina V. Stolyarskaya began systematic studies of agaricoid fungi of the Nizhne-Svirskiy Nature Reserve (Stolyarskaya, 1989, 1998). Later, in 1996–1998, Elizaveta A. Fomina studied ectomycorrhizal fungi of the same area (Fomina, 2000, 2001). The results of these long-term investigations were summarized in the monograph “Mycobiota of Nizhne-Svirskiy Nature Reserve” (Zmitrovich et al., 2015). Also numerous papers concerning agaricoid fungi diversity of protected area of both St. Petersburg and Leningrad Oblast were published (Kotkova, Morozova, and Popov, 2005, 2006, 2007; Morozova, 2007; Morozova and Smirnov, 2011; Morozova et al., 2020). In 1996 Olga V. Morozova began her research (Morozova, 1999, 2001, 2002; Morozova and Kovalenko, 2000). Since 2018 Lyudmila B. Kalinina has been studying the agaricoid fungi diversity of the region (Kalinina, 2018).

Vologda Oblast: in 1950, 1953 and 1956, the botanist Tamara N. Kutova collected material in Darvinskiy Nature Reserve (Kutova, 1957). More than 50 years later, in 2003–2006, Olga S. Shiryayeva (Kirillova) surveyed the Russkiy Sever National Park (Kirillova, 2006, 2007, 2009, 2012; Kirillova and Podolskaya, 2012).

Kaliningrad Oblast: Eugen Gramberg wrote a report on rare species of the region (Gramberg, 1923). The paper represents the first significant checklist, summarizing previous works by Abromeit, Hennings, Gramberg, and Neuhoff. Later, agaricoid fungi research continued only in 1998, with the work of Aleksandra A. Volodina and colleagues (Volodina, 2007) and a checklist of fungi based on all available sources was compiled (Dedkov, Volodina, and Gubareva, 2007). During 2004–2019, Atayev and Volodina surveyed the diversity of fleshy fungi in the Immanuel Kant Baltic Federal University Botanical Garden; the results were published recently (Atayev and Volodina, 2020).

Pskov Oblast: Alexander E. Kovalenko and Olga V. Morozova began systematic studies of agaricoid fungi in 1994 (Kovalenko and Morozova, 1999b). Later, researchers concentrated mostly on the Sebezhskiy National Park (Popov, 2001a; Kovalenko, Kolmakov, Morozova, and Popov, 2003; Kolmakov and Popov, 2005). Pavel Yu. Kolmakov and Evgeny S. Popov contributed significantly to the knowledge on the diversity of agaricoid fungi; the data were summarized in “Mycobiota of the Belarus-Valday Lakeland” (Popov et al., 2013). In 2019–2020, Lyudmila B. Kalinina studied the agaricoid fungi of the Polistovskiy Nature Reserve; data on new records were published recently (Kalinina, Bolshakov, and Bulyonkova, 2020).

Novgorod Oblast: the first scattered data on agaricoid fungi appear in a handful of papers (Rusakov, 1968; Kovalenko and Morozova, 1999b). Systematic studies of the diversity of agaricoid basidiomycetes began in the 2000's. A joint team of researchers from Russia (O.V. Morozova, A.E. Kovalenko and others) and the USA (R.H. Petersen and R. Halling) surveyed the Valdaiskiy National Park in 2001–2003 (Kovalenko, Morozova, Nezdojminogo, and Popov, 2005). In 2005, Ekaterina F. Malysheva continued these studies (Malysheva, Malysheva, and Zmitrovich, 2006, 2007). Later, Salavat N. Arslanov, Olga V. Morozova and Lyudmila B. Kalinina explored the diversity of agaricoid fungi in the region (Arslanov, 2012, 2014; Morozova, 2012; Morozova, Popov, and Fedosova, 2014; Baklan, 2015; Svetasheva et al., 2017; Kalinina, 2019; Bolshakov et al., 2020).

Tver Oblast: in the 1930–1940's, Vladimir Ya. Chastukhin worked in the Tsentralno-Lesnoy Nature Reserve (Chastukhin and Nikolaevskaya, 1969). In 1979, Sergey A. Kurochkin began to study agaricoid fungi in the region (Kurochkin, 1993, 2005, 2015). Later he surveyed the macromycetes of the Tver' city (Kurochkin and Medvedev, 2015; Kurochkin, 2016). During 2007–2010, Yulia G. Mukhina studied agaricoid fungi of the Tsentralno-Lesnoy Nature Reserve (Mukhina and Garibova, 2010; Mukhina, 2011a, 2011b); in 2014, an annotated list of fungi of the Reserve was published (Kotkova, 2014). In 2015, Olga V. Morozova surveyed the southwestern part of the region, discovering a number of species new for the region (Morozova, Aleksandrova, Popov, and Malysheva, 2016).

Yaroslavl Oblast: in 1994 Olga L. Lazareva began the study of agaricoid fungi of the region, including the Pereslavl'skiy National Park (Lazareva, 1997, 1998a, 1998b, 2002).

Kostroma Oblast: almost all available data on agaricoid fungi of the region can be found in just two papers (Burova, 1982; Veremyeva, 1986)..

Kirov Oblast: in 2000–2009, Dmitry V. Kirillov studied the agaricoid fungi of the region, resulting in a checklist of basidiomycetes of the Kirov oblast (Kirillov, 2011). From 2010 through 2017, researchers inventoried the macromycetes of the protected area “Bylina” (Stavishenko, Luginina, Kirillov, and Egoshina, 2019).

Udmurt Republic: in 1982, studies of agaricoid fungi of Udmurt were performed (Tychinin, 1990). Preliminary list of macromycetes was published later (Tychinin and Kuzmina, 2003). Since 2000 Vladimir I. Kapitonov has been studying the macromycetes of the region (Kapitonov, 2008, 2013).

Central part of European Russia

Smolensk Oblast: during the XX century, Lidiya G. Burova was the only mycologist to work in the region (Burova, 1969).

Kaluga Oblast: Marina N. Sionova studied biota of agaricoid fungi of Kaluzhskiye Zaseki Nature Reserve and Ugra National Park (Sionova, 2003, 2006, 2012).

Moscow and Moscow Oblast: in the 1960's, Lidiya G. Burova carried out ecological research in the region (Burova, 1968, 1971). Beginning from 1964, mycologists of the Moscow State University have been surveying the territory of the Zvenigorod Biological Station (Gorlenko, Sidorova, and Sidorova, 1989; Voronina et al., 2012, 2014). In the 1990's, Galina Ye. Levitskaya began to work in the Tsentralno-Lesnoy Nature Reserve (Levitskaya, 1995d, 1998, 2006, 2013). In 1993–1997, Mikhail V. Vishnevsky did a number of surveys (Vishnevsky and Sidorova, 1997; Vishnevsky, 1998).

Tula Oblast: since 2000, Tatyana Yu. Svetasheva has been studying the agaricoid fungi diversity of Tula Oblast (Svetasheva, 2001, 2003, 2004, 2005a, 2013, 2013).

Ryazan Oblast: beginning from 1987, Lyudmila F. Volosnova has been studying the pileate fungi of the Okskiy Nature Reserve (Volosnova, 1997, 2005, 2014; Malysheva and Volosnova, 2008).

Vladimir Oblast: there have been no studies to focus specifically on fungi in the region; a checklist of macromycetes and myxomycetes of the protected area Sudogodsky was published as a conference paper (Mishulin, Blinov, and Gushchina, 2018).

Ivanovo Oblast: data on agaricoid fungi can be found in papers by Ksenia P. Alyavdina (Alyavdina, 1928, 1949); we were unable to find any published studies focusing on fungi in the region.

Nizhny Novgorod Oblast: no published research on the fungi of the region exists, with the exception of some minor data in the regional Red List (Okhupkin, 2005; Chkalov, 2017).

Mari El Republic: until 2000, only scattered data appeared in a number of papers (Vassilkov, 1956b; Wasser, 1980; Ivanov, 1988b). In 2000–2001, Vladimir P. Prokhorov inventoried the fungi of the Bolshaya Kokshaga Nature Reserve (Prokhorov, 2007).

Chuvash Republic: in 1998, minor data on macromycetes of Prisurskiy Nature Reserve was obtained by Vadim G. Marfin (Marfin, 2001). Later, data on several species found in Chavash Varmane National Park was published (Vladimirova and Potapov, 2018).

Tatarstan: a detailed history of mycological research of the Tatarstan can be found in summary by Kim O. Potapov (2015c). In 1938–1940, Ljubov N. Vassiljeva studied mycobiota on the territory of modern of Raifa site of Volzsko-Kamskiy Nature Reserve, Tatarstan. Results of this work were published almost 40 years later (Vassiljeva, 1977). Since 2000, Kim O. Potapov has been studying macromycetes of the region, paying special attention to Nizhnyaya Kama National Park and Volzhsko-Kamskiy Nature Reserve (Potapov, Galejev, and Zhukov, 2013; Potapov, 2015b, 2016b).

Mordovia: in 1936–1939, Nikolay I. Kuznetsov did a phytocoenological survey of the Mordovskiy Nature Reserve; his collections included a number of agaricoid fungi that were identified by Rolf Singer. The resulting checklists were compiled as scientific reports; 20 years later, Olga Ya. Zinger prepared this material for publication (Kuznetsov, 1960). In 1941–1944, Vladimir Ya. Chastukhin worked in the Mordovskiy Nature Reserve (Chastukhin and Nikolaevskaya, 1969; Chastukhin, 2011). Since 2009, Alexander V. Ivoilov and Sergej Yu. Bolshakov have been studying the diversity of macromycetes of Mordovia, with an emphasis on the Mordovsky State Nature Reserve (Ivoilov and Bolshakov, 2011a, 2011b; Bolshakov and Ivoilov, 2012a; Bolshakov, 2015).

Penza Oblast: since 1980, Alexander I. Ivanov has been studying agaricoid fungi of the region (Ivanov, 1981a, 1982, 1983, 1985, 1986, 1988a, 1989; Ivanov and Nezdojminogo, 1990; Ivanov, 1992; Ivanov and Durandin, 1996; Ivanov, 2019), including an inventorying survey in the Privolzhskaya Lesostep' Nature Reserve (Ivanov, 1999).

Ulyanovsk Oblast: in the late 2000's, Evgeniy V. Ilyukhin collected material that was later summarized in his PhD thesis (Ilyukhin, 2009, 2010; Ilyukhin, 2010).

Samara Oblast: since 1999, Ekaterina F. Malysheva has been studying the biota of agaricoid fungi on the territory of the Zhigulevskiy Nature Reserve and Samarskaya Luka National park (Malysheva and Malysheva, 2004, 2005b, 2006; Malysheva, 2007; Malysheva and Malysheva, 2007, 2008).

Bryansk Oblast: in 2001–2007, Sergey A. Kruglikov studied the diversity of fleshy fungi of the Bryansky Les Nature Reserve (Kruglikov, 2007); to our knowledge, no other publications focusing on agaricoid fungi in the region exist.

Oryol Oblast: no studies focusing on agaricoid fungi have been published, however, some data is available in a handful of papers (Volobuev and Tsutsupa, 2009; Radygina, Derzhavina, and Tsutsupa, 2014; Bolshakov et al., 2020).

Lipetsk Oblast: Valentina N. Alferova collected material in the Galichya Gora Nature Reserve in 1969–1973 (Alferova, 1977). In 1990, Lyudmila A. Sarycheva began to study the macromycetes of the region, including the territories of the Galichya Gora and Voronezhskiy Nature Reserves (Sarycheva, 1999; Sarycheva et al., 2009; Sarycheva, 2011, 2014a, 2016; Sarycheva, Starodubtseva, and Sapelnikova, 2017).

Kursk Oblast: in 1970–1978, V. P. Ryabova and O. S. Ignatenko surveyed the diversity of fleshy fungi in the Tsentralno-Chernozemny Nature Reserve (Ryabova and Ignatenko, 1981). Later, macromycetes of the territory were studied by Elvira P. Bedenko (Bedenko, 1985, 1987). Also, some data on agaricoid fungi can be found in the works of N. G. Baranov, who collected specimens in the 1990's, and Valentina P. Soshnina, who has been working since 1996 (Soshnina, 2001, 2005, 2013, 2014, 2017; Baranov, 2002).

Belgorod Oblast: in 1934–1941, Ivan E. Brezhnev studied wood-inhabiting fungi of the “Les na Vorskle” site of the Belgorod's Nature Reserve, mentioning species of agaricoid fungi (Brezhnev, 1950). In 1976–1977, Elvira P. Bedenko studied macromycetes in the Belgorod Oblast (Bedenko, 1979a, 1980). Data on the mycobiota of “Les na Vorskle” can also be found in several papers (Ryabova and Ignatenko, 1981; Nikolayev, 1986; Soshnina, 1995; Psurtseva, Belova, and Ryabusheva, 2003).

Voronezh Oblast: the first data on the diversity of agaricoid fungi of the Voronezhskiy Nature Reserve and protected area “Kamennaya Step” can be found in the works of Vladimir Ya. Chastukhin (summarized in Chastukhin and Nikolaevskaya, 1969). In the 1980's, Elvira P. Bedenko also studied the macromycetes of Voronezh Oblast (Bedenko, 1985, 1987). Since 1985, Antonina I. Rtischeva worked in Voronezhskiy Nature Reserve (Rtischeva, 1999). Later, the existing knowledge was expanded with new material collected by Antonina I. Rtischeva, Artyom A. Afanasyev and Elena A. Starodubtseva (Afanasyev, Rtischeva, and Starodubtseva, 2007). Ten years later, an updated and corrected list of macromycetes of the Reserve was published (Sarycheva, Starodubtseva, and Sapelnikova, 2017). In 2015, a monograph on the current state of the oak forest of the Tellerman Experimental Forestry of the Institute of Forest Science, RAS, was published, with some data on agaricoid fungi (Selochnik, 2015).

Tambov Oblast: there have been no surveys focused on agaricoid fungi; information is available only from the regional Red List (Elenevskiy, 2002; Konakov et al., 2019).

Saratov Oblast: in 1927, Lidia A. Levedeva studied the mycobiota of the vicinities of Saratov (Lebedeva, 1927); later, in 1950–1980, Olga N. Komirnaya studied plant pathogens, but her published research includes some data on agaricoid fungi as well (Komirnaya, 1952, 1970, 1975, 1975).

Southern part of European Russia

Rostov Oblast: in 1980–1989, Sergey L. Vyshepan studied the macromycetes of the region's steppes (Vyshchepan, 1992). In 1997–2000 and in 2003, Yury A. Rebriev studied macromycetes in the northern part of the region (Rusanov et al., 2004). In 2006, a mycological workshop was held in Vyoshenskaya; as a result, an annotated list of macromycetes was published (Morozova et al., 2008; Zmitrovich et al., 2008). Since 1980, Rusanov and Vyshepan, and later, in 2000–2014, Rebriev with colleagues studied the mycobiota of the South Federal University Botanical garden; the results of their work were summarized recently (Rusanov, Rebriev, and Bulgakov, 2018).

Volgograd Oblast: in 1978, Lidia G. Burova conducted a mycocoenological survey in planted forest stands of the Dzhanybeck station in the Volgograd Oblast (Burova and Nezdoyminogo, 1980; Burova, 1982). Beginning from 2012, students of the Volgograd Pedagogical University conducted inventory studies of a number of regional protected areas (Dudka and Vedeneyev, 2014, 2015). Some results of mycological surveys of the Volga-Akhtuba floodplain, carried out in 2012–2014, were published by Tatiana Yu. Svetasheva (2015).

Kalmykia: information on three species is provided in Red Data Book (Baktasheva, 2014).

Astrakhan Oblast: in 2008–2010, surveys focused on fungi were carried out in the Bogdino-Baskunchakskiy Nature Reserve (Rebriev, Aleksandrova, et al., 2012).

Also, in 2008–2010, a team of researchers carried out a study on the mycobiota of arid territories of the southwestern part of Russia (Rebriev, Rusanov, et al., 2012). Material was collected in the Rostov Oblast (near Rostov, Vyoshenskaya and several other localities), Volgograd Oblast (a number of regional protected areas), Astrakhan Oblast (Bogdino-Baskunchakskiy Nature Reserve and around Astrakhan), Krasnodar Krai (Taman peninsula), Stavropol Krai (vicinities of Stavropol) and Kalmykia (Chyornye Zemli Nature Reserve and other localities). Unfortunately, no exact localities or even administrative regions are provided in the checklist.

Crimea and Sevastopol: the first more or less significant contribution to the knowledge of Crimean pileate fungi was made by Maria Ya. Zerova (Zerova, 1962). In 1992, Meinhard Moser, a prominent mycologist, visited the Crimean Mountains and published a checklist of noteworthy species a year later (Moser, 1993). In the 1990's, Irina S. Sarkina began to study pileate fungi (Sarkina, 2001; Sarkina, Prydiuk, and Heluta, 2003; Dudka et al., 2004; Sarkina, 2006, 2010b, 2014b, 2020c). Inventory studies of the Crimean National Park (Sarkina, 2011), Yaltinsky Gorno-Prirodny Nature Reserve (Sarkina and Prydiuk, 2012), and Karadagskiy Nature Reserve (Sarkina and Mironova, 2015) were conducted, too. In 1980, Vladimir P. Isikov began his studies of wood-inhabiting fungi, with an emphasis on pathogenic species; several agaricoid species are mentioned in his publications (Isikov, 2003, 2020).

Northern Caucasus

Krasnodar Krai and Adygea: in 1935–1936, Ljubov N. Vassiljeva performed mycobiota inventory studies in Kavkazskiy Nature Reserve (Vassiljeva, 1939), Rolf Singer also worked with this material (Singer, 1937, 1938a, 1941, 1943). In 1977–1979, Alexander E. Kovalenko studied the diversity of agaricoid fungi in North-Western Caucasus (Kovalenko, 1979a, 1980b, 1980a). In the 1980's, Mall Vaasma with colleagues explored the territory of Kavkazskiy Nature Reserve and as a result they summarized all existing data (Vaasma, Kalamees, and Raitviir, 1986). Since 1994, Anna A. Kiyashko (Sopina) continued studies on agaricoid fungi diversity of mountain forests of the Belaya River basin (Sopina, 2000, 2001a, 2001b, 2004a, 2004b; Kiyashko, 2011).

Stavropol Krai: in 1925, Lidia A. Levedeva studied the mycobiota of steppe communities in the vicinity of the Sengileevskoye lake (Lebedeva, 1930). Later no special studies of fungi in the region were conducted (except some data obtained during the study of the mycobiota of arid zones, without usable geographical attributes; see Rebriev et al. (2012)).

Karachay-Cherkess Republic: the earliest data on agaricoid fungi can be found in the already mentioned publication by Vassiljeva (Vassiljeva, 1939). In the 1980's, Vladimir G. Onipchenko and E. N. Kaverina studied the macromycetes of Teberdinskiy Nature Reserve (Onipchenko and Kaverina, 1989). In 1996–1999, Kuulo Kalamees and Rustam S.-M. Botashev explored mycobiota in the same reserve (Kalamees and Botashev, 2000). In 2009, mycological expedition to the Teberda took place (Malysheva, 2011a; Malysheva and Svetasheva, 2011).

Kabardino-Balkarian Republic: in 1928–1929, Rolf Singer visited Central Caucasus, including what is now the Prielbrusye National Park and Kabardino-Balkarskiy Nature Reserve (Singer, 1929, 1931, 1937, 1938a). In 1999,

Elena A. Krapivina started research of the diversity of agaricoid fungi in the region (Shkhagapsoev and Krapivina, 2003, 2004).

North Ossetia: in 1924–1926, Zinaida S. Chernetskaja conducted plant pathology surveys of forests; several species of agaricoid fungi are mentioned in her work published afterwards (Chernetskaja, 1929). In 1997–2000, I. A. Nikolaev studied the diversity of macromycetes in the northern part of the republic (Nikolayev, 2001).

Ingushetia: no studies of agaricoid fungi have been published.

Chechen Republic: data on macromycetes of the Republic, including agaricoid fungi, can be found in the works of Musa A. Taysumov with colleagues (Taysumov, Krapivina, Umarov, and Astamirova, 2012; Taysumov, Krapivina, and Kushaliev, 2016).

Dagestan: there have been no surveys focused on agaricoid fungi; information is available only from the regional Red List (Magomedov, 2020).

The Urals

Results of long-term studies (mainly since the 1950's till 1973; but earlier studies were also considered) of agaricoid fungi of the Urals were summarized by Neonila T. Stepanova and Alevtina V. Sirko (Stepanova and Sirko, 1977). The work contains data on the mycobiota of the Yamalo-Nenets Autonomous Okrug, Perm Krai, Sverdlovsk and Chelyabinsk Oblasts, and Bashkortostan.

Yamalo-Nenets Autonomous Okrug (western part): in the 1960's, Lidiya K. Kazantseva studied the mycobiota of the Polar Urals (Kazantseva, 1966, 1970, 1972). In 1990 and 1992, during the first stage of the First Russian-Scandinavian Trans-Siberian Mycological Expedition, and in 1996 during the Fifth International Symposium on Arctic and Alpine Mycology, Victor A. Mukhin and Henning Knudsen collected specimens of agaricoid fungi (Knudsen and Mukhin, 1998). Emma L. Nezdoyminogo revised the collected materials together with Boris P. Vassilkov in 1962, along with specimens collected by S. I. Sandomirskaja, Stepan G. Shijatov and Irina Yu. Kirtsideli. She also summarized all published data on agaricoid fungi of the Polar Urals alpine tundra in an overview (Nezdoyminogo, 2001).

Komi Republic: the first data on agaricoid basidiomycetes were obtained by researchers from the Botanical Institute of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR, who carried out stationary studies of forest-tundra vegetation in the northeast of the Komi Republic in the early 1960's. These studies resulted in the paper by Boris P. Vassilkov (1970). Later, these data were included in the summary "Fungi of the Russian Arctic" (Nezdoyminogo, 1997a; Karatygin, Nezdoyminogo, Novozhilov, and Zhurbenko, 1999). In 2000, Marina A. Palamarchuk (Bobretsova) started a systematic study of agaricoid fungi in the Komi Republic, including the Pechoro-Ilychskiy Nature Reserve (Bobretsova, 2004; Palamarchuk (Bobretsova), 2009; Palamarchuk, 2011a, 2012, 2020a, 2020b) and the Yugyd Va National Park (Palamarchuk, 2011b, 2016b, 2020b; Palamarchuk and Kirillov, 2018a).

Perm Krai: since 1975, Lidiya G. Perevedentseva has been studying agaricoid fungi of the region (Perevedentseva, Nezdoyminogo, and Kovalenko, 1990; Perevedentseva, Mukhutdinov, and Kuznetsova, 2005; Perevedentseva, 2008). In 1984, an inventorying survey of the Basegi Nature Reserve was conducted (Shkaraba, Perevedentseva, and Moshkina, 1990); the mycobiota of the Visherskiy Nature Reserve was studied as well (Belkovskaya et al., 2014). Beginning from 2010, Vitaliy S. Botalov has been studying fungi in the region (Botalov, 2015, 2017; Botalov, Perevedentseva, and Shishigin, 2020).

Sverdlovsk Oblast: a detailed history of mycological studies in Sverdlovsk Oblast can be found in the summary by Olga S. Shiryaeva (2015b); here we mention several key papers dealing with the diversity of agaricoid fungi. The first review was published in a monograph by (Stepanova and Sirko, 1977). Data on several wood-inhabiting species can be found in (Mukhin, 1993). In 1992–2005, Lidiya V. Marina performed inventory studies on Visimskiy Nature Reserve (Marina, 2006). Later, Olga S. Shiryaeva obtained data on new species for the region (Shiryaeva, 2018; Shiryaeva and Palamarchuk, 2019), also revision of genera Conocybe and Pholiotina from Sverdlovsk Oblast was made (Shiryaeva and Malysheva, 2018).

Chelyabinsk Oblast: in the 1960's, L. N. Aleksandrovskaia and A. S. Lobanova performed inventory studies on agaricoid fungi of the region (Aleksandrovskaia and Lobanova, 1968). Also, data on agaricoid fungi can be obtained from review by Stepanova and Sirko (1977).

Orenburg Oblast: first data on macromycetes of the region can be found in a paper by Petr A. Vorontsovsky (1921). Noteworthy, that he collected fungi by the way as the main purpose of his field surveys were insects. In 1993, Maksim A. Safonov started research on diversity and ecology of wood-inhabiting macromycetes, some data on agaricoid fungi can be found in his papers (Safonov, 2002, 2015; Safonov, Malenkova, Rusakov, and Leneva, 2013). In 2000–2007, Olesya A. Desyatova (Korshikova) had been studying agaricoid fungi diversity of the region (Korshikova, 2006; Desyatova, 2007, 2007).

Bashkortostan: some data on agaricoid fungi can be found in a review by Stepanova and Sirko (1977). No special studies have been conducted since the 1970's.

SIBERIA

Western Siberia

In the 1970–1980's, Victor A. Mukhin studied wood-inhabiting fungi of the Western Siberian Plain (Mukhin, 1993); the monograph contains data on agaricoid fungi collected in the Yamalo-Nenets and Khanty-Mansi Autonomous Okrugs, as well as the Tyumen, Sverdlovsk, and Kurgan Oblasts. Results of surveys from 1967 till 2000 in the southern part of Western Siberia were summarized in a review and an annotated checklist by Perova and Gorbunova (2001). The work covers the diversity of agaricoid fungi in the Novosibirsk, Tomsk and Kemerovo Oblasts as well as in the Altai Republic and Altayskiy Krai.

Yamalo-Nenets Autonomous Okrug (eastern part): in 1983–1991, O. B. Tarchevskaya surveyed agaricoid fungi of the Yamal tundra (Tarchevskaya, 1990). Unfortunately, studies were not completed, and published only partially (Mukhin, 2008).

Khanty-Mansi Autonomous Okrug: a comprehensive summary of the history of mycological research in the region was compiled by Nina V. Filippova with colleagues (Filippova et al., 2017a, 2017b). Here, we mention only those works that significantly contribute to the knowledge of the diversity of agaricoid fungi (Zvyagina, Baykalova, and Gorbunova, 2007; Zvyagina, 2008; Filippova, 2014; Shepeleva et al., 2014; Filippova and Bulyonkova, 2017a, 2017b; Zvyagina and Baykalova, 2017).

Kurgan Oblast: the first data on the diversity of agaricoid fungi can be found in two summaries (Stepanova and Sirko, 1977; Mukhin, 1993). A list of macromycetes of the Ozerninsky Bor territory is provided in (Bystrushkin, 2016). It should be noted that in many Russian publications, the Kurgan oblast is conventionally treated as part of the Urals region.

Tyumen Oblast: no published surveys exist for the region, however, Viktor A. Mukhin reported several species (1993).

Omsk Oblast: no systematic studies were conducted; some data on fungi can be found in works by Albert Pilát (1934) and Ateo M. Zhukov (1980).

Tomsk Oblast: the first data on the diversity of fleshy fungi were collected and published by Nina V. Perova (1972) and Larisa S. Milovidova (1980). In the 1990's, Perova and Irina A. Gorbunova carried out systematic studies on agaricoid fungi of the region; the data can be found in the already mentioned summary (Perova and Gorbunova, 2001). In the 2000's, Alyona P. Kosheleva and Natalia P. Kutafjeva studied mycobiota of the territory between the rivers Ob and Tom (Kosheleva and Kutafjeva, 2004). In 2004–2005, Nadezhda N. Kudashova (Agafonova) with colleagues worked in the central part of the region (Agafonova, Kutafjeva, and Gashkov, 2007, 2009b). In 2013, her team compiled a preliminary checklist of macromycetes of the region (Kudashova, Gashkov, and Kutafjeva, 2013); later additional data were published (Kudashova, Gashkov, and Vaishlya, 2016a) as well as information on rare and threatened species (Kudashova, Gashkov, and Vaishlya, 2016b). In 2004–2015, a team lead by Olga B. Vaishlya studied macromycetes ectomycorrhizal with Pinus sibirica and Pinus sylvestris (Vaishlya et al., 2017).

Novosibirsk Oblast: in 1965–1967, G. A. Zaytseva surveyed the northern part of the region (Zaytseva, 1971). Nina V. Perova conducted inventory studies around the Karachi Experimental Station, established as part of the IBP (International Biological Program, 1964–1974), in the Baraba forest-steppe in 1971–1972; the results were published five years later (Perova, 1977). In 1972–1974 and 1983–1984, Nina V. Perova collected specimens on the western slope of the Salair ridge (Perova, 1982; Perova and Gorbunova, 2007). In 2001, a major review covering a number of Western Siberian regions was published (Perova and Gorbunova, 2001). In 2000–2004, Irina A. Gorbunova did some surveying of the steppe communities (Gorbunova, 2006) and pine forests (Gorbunova, 2007) in Southwestern Siberia. A checklist of fleshy fungi of the territory of the of Central Siberian Botanical Garden is provided in (Koropachinskiy and Banaev, 2014).

Altai Krai (northwestern part): beginning from 2000, Irina A. Gorbunova conducted several surveys of the steppe zone of the region (Gorbunova, 2006; Gorbunova and Perova, 2006).

South Siberia

Altai Krai (southeastern part): beginning from 2000, Irina A. Gorbunova worked in Tigirekskiy Nature Reserve together with Yulia A. Chubarova (Gorbunova and Chubarova, 2008; Gorbunova, Vlasenko, and Tzhubarova, 2011; Gorbunova, 2018a).

Altai Republic: the first data on the region appears in the works of Albert Pilát (1934, 1935). Rolf Singer and Ljubov N. Vassiljeva visited the territory in the 1930's, and the results of the survey were published in a number of papers (Singer, 1938a, 1938d, 1938e, 1938c, 1939, 1943, 1945, 1950a, 1950b). In 1990, Alexander E. Kovalenko studied fleshy fungi in the Altaiskiy Nature Reserve (Kovalenko, 1992). In 1994, Irina A. Gorbunova began regular surveys of the mycobiota of the Altai mountains, resulting in numerous publications (Gorbunova, 1996, 1997, 2003, 2010, 2019; Perova and Gorbunova, 2001). Beginning from 2000, she did several surveys in the Katunskiy Nature Reserve (Gorbunova, 2001a, 2008, 2017a) and Tigirekskiy Nature Reserve together with Yulia A. Chubarova (Gorbunova and Chubarova, 2008; Gorbunova, Vlasenko, and Tzhubarova, 2011; Gorbunova, 2018a). In 2018, a joint Russian-Norwegian team (Tatyana Yu. Svetasheva, Tor Eric Brandrud, Olga V. Morozova, Irina A. Gorbunova) visited the Altaiskiy Nature Reserve (Brandrud et al., 2019; Svetasheva et al., 2019).

Kemerovo Oblast: only five sources containing information on agaricoid fungi was found (Pilát, 1934; Zhukov, 1972, 1980; Perova and Gorbunova, 2001; Kupriyanov, 2012).

Khakassia: first data can be found in summarizing work on fungi of southern part of Krasnoyarsk Krai in former borders by Matilda I. Beglyanova (1972a). Thirty years later, during 2006–2014, Natalja A. Zauzolkova and Irina A. Gorbunova studied the macromycetes diversity of Minusink Depression (Zauzolkova, 2012, 2015; Zauzolkova and Gorbunova, 2016). In 2011, Natalya V. Majnagasheva collected specimens of macromycetes in steppe sites of Khakasskiy Nature Reserve (Gorbunova and Majnagasheva, 2013).

Krasnoyarsk Krai (southern part): from 1954 to 1971, Matilda I. Beglyanova organized numerous surveys of agaricoid fungi in the vicinity of Krasnoyarsk and in the southern part of the region. The results of 16 years of studies were published as an annotated species list and phenological data (Beglyanova, 1972a). In 2003, Kutafjeva and Kosheleva explored the Sayano-Shushenskiy Nature Reserve (Kutafjeva and Kosheleva, 2005) and Krasnoyarskie Stolby National Park (Kosheleva and Kutafjeva, 2008b; Kosheleva, 2010). In 2011–2014, Olga E. Kruchkova studied the mycobiota of the same protected area (Kryuchkova, 2015). In 2006, she collected material on the Arandansky ridge, in the Western Sayan mountain system (Kryuchkova, 2009). During 2006–2014, Natalja A. Zauzolkova and Irina A. Gorbunova studied the diversity of fungi of the Minusink Depression (Zauzolkova, 2012, 2015; Zauzolkova and Gorbunova, 2016). In 2010, Gorbunova did a survey of the Ergaki protected area in the Western Sayan mountains (Gorbunova, 2016). In 2015, Ekaterina F. Malysheva, Alexander E. Kovalenko, Anna A. Kiyashko conducted an inventorying study of the of Sayano-Shushenskiy Nature Reserve; the results were published two years later (Malysheva, Malysheva, Kiyashko, et al., 2017). In 1998–2018, Igor V. Krom, an outstanding citizen scientist, studied the diversity of fleshy fungi around the village Zharovsk, in the Eastern Sayan mountains (Krom and Kapitonov, 2019).

Tyva Republic: in 1993, Nina V. Perova, and in 2014, Irina A. Gorbunova studied fleshy fungi in the region (Gorbunova, 2015).

Irkutsk Oblast (southern and eastern parts): since the 1990's, Alexander N. Petrov performed research in the Pribaykalskiy National Park (Petrov, 2008). In 1998–2000, Sergey M. Muzyka studied the macromycetes in Nizhneudinky District of the region (Muzyka, 2002). In 2013, Irina A. Gorbunova and Nadezhda V. Stepancova explored Baikalo-Lenskiy Nature Reserve (Gorbunova and Stepancova, 2015).

Buryatia: B. A. Tomilin (1963) reported some species collected by P. S. Mikhno in 1910–1928. In 1966–1970, Emma L. Nezdoinogo worked in Barguzinskiy Nature Reserve while preparing her PhD thesis (Nezdoinogo, 1970a, 1973). Later, since 1979, Alexander N. Petrov performed studies in the vicinity of the Baikal Lake (Petrov, 1991, 2013).

Zabaykalsky Krai: no special researchers were performed, information was obtained from several sources (Tomilin, 1963; Petrov, 2013; Polyakov, Popova, and Afonina, 2017).

Eastern Siberia

Krasnoyarsk Krai (northern part): in 1960–1970, mycologists worked on the territory of Taimyr Peninsula (northern part of the region), results were published in a number of works (Vassilkov, 1971b; Stepanova and Tomilin, 1973). Later, Michail P. Zhurbenko collected specimens on the territory of Taymyrskiy Nature Reserve, collections were identified by Emma L. Nezdoinogo (Nezdoinogo and Zhurbenko, 1996). In 2000, Nina V. Matvejeva collected specimens on Bolshevik Island. Emma L. Nezdoinogo identified the collection and revised specimens from Franz Josef Land and Severnaya Zemlya (Nezdoinogo, 2002).

Krasnoyarsk Krai (central part): in 1972, Emma L. Nezdoinogo visited Mirnoje village (Nezdoinogo, 1976a, 1982a), in 1982–1987, L. S. Lapitskaya performed research in vicinities of Nikulino village (Lapitskaya, 1990, 1993). In 1999–2005, Kosheleva and Kutafjeva worked in Teseevsky District (Kosheleva and Kutafjeva, 2008a).

Irkutsk Oblast (northern part): N. P. Kutafjeva began systematic studies of agaricoid fungi in 1968 (Kutafjeva, 1982, 1983, 1984); later, Vladimir V. Astapenko joined the research (Kutafjeva and Astapenko, 1987; Kutafjeva, 1989; Astapenko, 1990a; Astapenko and Kutafjeva, 1990). In the 1980's, Alexander N. Petrov began his studies (Petrov, 1983, 1984, 1986, 1989, 1991, 2013; Petrov, Nezdoininogo, and Bulakh, 1987). In 2008 and 2014, Sergey M. Muzyka collected material in different parts of the region (Muzyka, 2009; Muzyka and Penzina, 2017).

Sakha Republic: during the Yakutsk Complex Expedition of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR in 1929–1930, Andrey L. Birkenhof collected agaricoid fungi, among other specimens. Unfortunately, specimens were kept in alcohol, so the collection has not been preserved. Nevertheless, Lidia A. Lebedeva identified the collected specimens, and later, some data were published (Birkenhof, 1936). Eventually, Emma L. Nezdoininogo summarised some data on Cortinariaceae, Galerina and Inocybe species in her major monograph on cortinarioid fungi (Nezdoininogo, 1996). Data on species collected in the northern part of the republic (including the Ust'-Lenskij Nature Reserve) are summarized in (Karatygin et al., 1999), and later were enlarged (Nezdoininogo, 2003).

FAR EAST

Chukotka Autonomous Okrug: in 1972, V. F. Shamurin and V. V. Petrovsky collected material on the Wrangel island. Emma L. Nezdoininogo identified the collections (Nezdoininogo, 1997a). In 1986–1987, Nina A. Sazanova conducted an inventorying survey in the Anadyr river basin (Sazanova, 1993). Later, the existing data was summarized in a monograph on the fungi of the Russian Arctic (Karatygin, Nezdoininogo, Novozhilov, and Zhurbenko, 1999).

Magadan Oblast: in the 1970's, Margarita A. Nazarova surveyed the agaricoid fungi of the region (Nazarova, 1976). Beginning in 1985, Nina A. Sazanova has been studying the diversity of fleshy fungi in the Magadan Nature Reserve (Sazanova, 1996, 2009a, 2011) and other territories of the region (Sazanova, 2009b; Sazanova and Golodnova, 2015).

Kamchatka Krai: in 1978, Kuulo Kalamees and Mall Vaasma studied the diversity of macromycetes in the region (Kalamees and Vaasma, 1981). During the Russian-Scandinavian Trans-Siberian Mycological Expedition in 1997, collections of Inocybe species were made (Peintner and Horak, 2002).

Amur Oblast: in 1959, Boris A. Tomilin studied fungi of various natural communities in the southwestern part of the region (Tomilin, 1962). In 1976, Margarita M. Nazarova explored the Selenga River basin (Nazarova, 1986). Later, a checklist of the Khinganskiy Nature Reserve was published (Azbukina et al., 1998). In 1977–1979, an expedition from Moscow State University surveyed the mycobiota of the Tukuringir, in the Zeiskiy Nature Reserve (Gordienko, Petrova, and Tarasov, 1981). In 2000 and in 2014–2015, Natalia A. Kochunova (Taranina) collected specimens of basidial macromycetes in the same reserve (Bulakh, Govorova, and Taranina, 2003; Kochunova, 2016; Kochunova and Erofeeva, 2017), in 2001–2004, she surveyed the nature monument "Mukhinka", located near Blagoveschensk city (Taranina, 2005), and in 2013–2015, she conducted surveys of the Urban Cluster of the Amur Branch of the Botanical Garden-Institute (Kochunova, 2019).

Jewish Autonomous Oblast: Evgenia M. Bulakh started a systematized study of the agaricoid fungi diversity of the Bastak Nature Reserve (Bulakh, Govorova, Nazarova, and Vassiljeva, 2007; Bau, Bulakh, and Govorova, 2011); later, Elena A. Erofeeva joined the project (Erofeeva, Bukharova, and Bulakh, 2019).

Khabarovsk Krai: systematic studies of agaricoid fungi were concentrated on inventorying the diversity of the Bolshekhikhtsirskiy (Azbukina et al., 1986; Bau, Bulakh, and Govorova, 2011; Bogacheva et al., 2018), Komsomolskiy (Azbukina et al., 1989; Bogacheva et al., 2018), Bureinsky (Bulakh, Vassiljeva, and Erofeeva, 2010), and Botchinskiy Nature Reserves (Bulakh, 2013) and Anyuyskiy National Park (Erofeeva and Bulakh, 2015a, 2016; Bogacheva et al., 2018).

Primorsky Krai: a detailed review of mycological studies in the region is provided in Bogacheva (2018). In the second half of the XX century, Ljubov N. Vassiljeva fruitfully worked in various parts of the Russian Far East and published a large number of works (Vassiljeva, 1950, 1972, 1973, and others). Later, Margarita M. Nazarova and Eugenia M. Bulakh started their research that resulted in numerous publications (Bunkina and Nazarova, 1978, 1978; Nazarova, 1978; Bulakh, 1987, 1989; Azbukina et al., 1990; Bardunov et al., 2002; Bau, Bulakh, and Govorova, 2011; Bulakh et al., 2016, and others).

Sakhalin Oblast: Ljubov N. Vassiljeva and Margarita M. Nazarova worked on the island in the 1960's (Vassiljeva and Nazarova, 1972). In 1996–1997, during a scientific expedition focused on the biodiversity of the Kuril islands, Bogatov collected specimens of agaricoid fungi that were later studied and identified by Eugenia M. Bulakh (Bulakh, Govorova, and Bogatov, 1999). Scattered data on agaricoid fungi of the region can be found in numerous papers (Vassiljeva, 1973; Nezdoininogo, 1980b; Bulakh, 2003; Kalamees, 2004; Kobayashi and Terashima, 2014) and others).
